As Salam Alaykum Wa Rahmatullahi Wa Barakatuhu,

What I found in English

I went through the students' English manuals and workbooks this week and I am writing down what I noticed. The manual work is sporadic. I am missing a lot of questions, the writing is patchy and not really complete, and there is no sign that the exercises were verified as done. Where an activity was started it was not completed.

Chapter one is much better, the work there is completed, but I do not see any correction on it. After chapter one the manual becomes somewhat complete but still very sporadic. The speed at which the groups are moving through the chapters is fine, that is not the concern. The concern is what is left undone on each page behind them.

The writing is not satisfactory. We are into the second week and I have not yet seen a written text from the students, and that is concerning at this stage. The writing that has been done in class has been very helpful, so that part is working and should continue.

What I found in Math

The math picture is the same across the levels. Correction is not being done properly and word problems are being skipped. Word problems cannot be skipped, they need to be completed in full and with rigour. Anything extra or not needed is to be circled in blue rather than named, so it is known at a glance.

What I expect moving forward

Every exercise assigned in the English manual is verified as done. Missing questions are completed, not left behind.

Every completed page is corrected, with the correction visible, chapter one included.

Make sure the exercise numbers you assign are the ones the students actually do, and organize the class so that manual time and writing time are both protected.

More writing. I want regular written texts from every group starting now. Keep the in-class writing, it is the part that is working.

Textbooks one and two are to be completed with no gaps. Get the textbooks in the students' hands.

In math, all word problems are done properly, correction is done properly, and extras are circled in blue.

I know the load is heavy at the start of the year and I appreciate the work you are putting in. Please go through your groups' manuals this week with the points above in mind and confirm with me once it is done. May Allah reward you and put barakah in your efforts.

Jazakallah khayra,
